

Conversations with P'taah

Channelled by Jani King

Sample - June 2019

Burning Questions with Nelly

Track 2: Relationships and sex

Nelly: So we have a burning questions yet again, lot of questions.

P'taah: Indeed, very good, let us begin.

Nelly: And we begin with some of the oldest questions on earth, about relationships and sex.

P'taah: All right.

Nelly: “Can you please go into depth about relationship dynamics between men and women? In many cases men have strong sexual appetites compared to most women, and men usually cheat more. Is this what our society has conditioned us to be? Or is it in the nature of men to be this way? I’m not saying women don’t cheat or have sexual appetites, but I’m just curious why I notice this more in men.”

P'taah: Well, indeed when you look at the history, your known history, it is the men who are required to, if you like, to breed. Without the men, then women would not be having their babies. Of course also it is about diversity of seed, and so in a way it is in the nature of men to scatter the seed, so to speak.

However in saying this we are not taking into consideration that which is love. And of course it love that is the most important, and it is love which indeed have, we would say, allowed the human race to go on existing, and where there is love there is certain behaviour in love, honour and respect, there is a certain way of being.

So in your society it have been quite promoted that men may indeed, what is called, play the field while woman keep the house, and those ideas are really historically embedded. As we say, this is not taking into consideration the love honour and respect in a committed relationship.

Where there can be open communication, where there can be the desire to have not only, what we would say, the relationship, the one-on-one relationship, but everything that goes with it – that is friendship, that is fun, that is to be the nurturing and support of each other, and one of the most important ways that this happens is really and truly by open and honest communication, and without that a relationship will founder.

That is not to say it won’t founder anyway, of course, because you are human and because you grow and you diverge in your interests and in your needs, as it were, to grow and to expand. However, most things can be overcome, or at least amicably overcome, if there really is honest communication.